Things are [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] I saw on TV and read in today's [illegible]. Nixon's psychological [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible], [illegible] [illegible], and [illegible] told him the [illegible] would [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible]'s time [illegible] [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] government [illegible] [illegible] run by [illegible], [illegible] and [illegible]. The [illegible] [illegible] political [illegible] in [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] in [illegible] [illegible] and there are [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible], [illegible]. [illegible]

There are two quotes from Kissinger swearing-in I saw on TV and not in today's [illegible]. Nixon's psychological need to tell himself and everyone else how great he is (Henry was worried about confirmation, [illegible] [illegible], and "I make him the vase would be big [illegible] was"); and Henry's fine self-serving statement on how foreign governments are not run by hate, secrecy and other [illegible]. Why Marilyn Berger omitted those in her story or why if she didn't they were edited out [illegible] me because the story is short in quote and these are by any standard meaningful quotes. HW 9/23/73
